Instructions

1. Heat the oven to 400 degrees F. Drain the tofu, wrap it in a towel, and press lightly to remove excess liquid.
2. Cut the tofu into about 1 inch cubes and add to a bowl.
3. Toss the cubes with the soy sauce, then the cornstarch, then the breadcrumbs, until well coated.
4. Spread on a parchment-lined baking sheet so the pieces do not touch, and bake 25 minutes, then turn off the oven and let sit 5 more minutes to crisp.
5. While the tofu bakes, whisk all the sauce ingredients except the 1 teaspoon each of water and cornstarch in a small pot.
6. Whisk the 1 teaspoon cornstarch with the 1 teaspoon water in a small bowl, stir into the pot, and heat over low/medium, whisking, until the sauce bubbles and thickens. Remove from heat and let it thicken further.
7. Let the baked tofu cool 5 minutes, then transfer to a bowl and toss with half the sauce, reserving the rest for serving.
8. Serve over rice with cucumber, carrot, avocado, and sesame seeds; also good with broccoli. Stick with low sodium soy sauce so it does not get too salty.
9. Air fryer option: cook at 375 degrees F for 15 minutes, shaking every 5 minutes, then toss with the sauce.

Ingredients (continued)

Sauce

- 1/4 cup low sodium tamari or soy sauce
- 1/4 cup gochujang (Korean red chili paste); check label if gluten free matters
- 1 tablespoon tomato paste
- 2 tablespoons vegetable broth or water
- 3 tablespoons honey (use maple syrup to make it fully vegan)
- 1 tablespoon toasted sesame oil
- 1 tablespoon rice vinegar
- 2 teaspoons garlic — minced
- 1 teaspoon fresh ginger — grated
- 1 teaspoon cornstarch
- 1 teaspoon water

Tips

- Vegan swap: Use maple syrup instead of honey for a fully vegan version.
- Gluten-free: Use GF-certified tamari and breadcrumbs to keep it gluten free.
- Extra crispy: Press the tofu well and don't crowd the pan — space lets the edges crisp.

Source page bills it as vegan and gluten free; the listed version uses honey (pareve; swap maple syrup for a fully vegan version) and is gluten free only if GF-certified tamari and breadcrumbs are used. — Eat With Clarity — https://eatwithclarity.com/gochujang-korean-tofu/
